

CONTINENTAL UNITED STATE FEELS THE IMPACT OF ENEMY GUNFIRE FOR FIRST TIME SINCE WORLD WAR I; DAMAGE IS BUT SLIGHT

Submarine Rises One Mile Off Coast of California and Fire
About 15 Shells From Deck Gun—Little Damage Done
To Oil Fields, Refineries and Storage Tanks at Goleta, Which Were the Targets

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., Feb. 24.—(INS)—For the first time since World War I Continental United States had felt the impact of enemy gunfire today.

A huge Axis submarine rose a mile off shore at the very instant President Roosevelt was speaking to the nation last night and poured approximately 15 shells from a four- or five-inch deck gun at oil fields, refineries and storage tanks at Goleta, 11 miles north of Santa Barbara.

Obviously timed to coincide with the President's talk, the shelling did little damage and caused no casualties.

Only one of the shots took effect, and an eyewitness account issued by the Navy indicated that the effect was slight. It hit a derrick and, according to P. W. Borden, superintendent of the oil field, caused only minor damage to the pumping equipment and derrick.

The submarine stood offshore for 20 minutes to hurl its shells at the shoreline oil facilities. Then it slipped underwater and escaped in hit-and-run fashion.

Navy planes, rushed to the scene, dropped red flares all along the Santa Barbara channel, from Goleta to Carpinteria, but there was no indication that they located the sub or dropped depth charges.

Reports of flashing lights off-shore and in the hills behind Montecito, indicated possible fifth column co-operation with the marauding submarine, and shortly after the attack four Japanese and an Italian were arrested in Ventura County.

The entire section was plunged into blackness by a blackout order, which came some time after the attack because of the extended twilight.

Santa Barbara, Santa Maria, Ventura and Oxnard, along with smaller surrounding communities, were left in inky darkness by the complete shutdown of lights, all motor traffic was halted and soldiers and State Guards.

Mrs. George C. Butler, chairman of the question-box committee, was in charge and a committee suggested that the school board do something about eliminating the alleged fire hazards in the local schools.

The committee feels that any class room or library furniture, such as tables and loose chairs, in the halls are a hazard so far as the safety of

A TIME FOR MODESTY

A new post-war program has been presented to America. Dr. Ernest M. Hopkins, president of Dartmouth College, in an address at Taft School, outlined a plan designed to give American schoolboys an international point of view and fit them for the roles of leadership in the vital part which the United States will play in world affairs after the war.

He is quoted as having said that Great Britain had worn herself out giving the world a form of order, and that she held the fort until someone else came along to take over the burden.

Doctor Hopkins asserted that the only question was whether the coming generation has the ability and will to accept the job and carry it through.

It appears that Doctor Hopkins is right in outlining the plan for the schoolboys, but that he is offering the wrong reasons. A nation as important as the United States in world affairs should have a large body of men possessed of a viewpoint which fits them for service as leaders as occasion may demand.

But what of this talk about Britain having worn itself out in giving the world a form of order? It is not certain that Britain is worn out. Nor is there evidence that Britain is ready to surrender "the fort." Britain has rejected opportunities in the past to slip into a secondary role and let another nation assume the task of giving order to the world.

It would be flattering to think that Great Britain has never trusted any nation but the United States. That may be true, but perhaps Americans should continue to speak of joint effort in giving order to the world.

COUNTRY DOCTOR

When a country doctor can make the headlines because of something he cannot do, this may be taken as proof that the human interest story will survive in the press in spite of war and disaster.

Dr. Allen Roy Dafee probably never would have been heard of outside his own little backwoods if one of nature's most rare phenomena had not occurred within his orbit. The birth of the Dionne quintuplets directed the world's spotlight on a small Canadian community and upon the doctor who had brought them into the world.

Even if the five little girls had not survived, the event itself would have furnished material for human interest and medical research. But live they did, all of them, and the quintuplets and Doctor Dafee together were catapulted into news columns.

The girls are growing up. They speak the language of their parents. And Doctor Dafee, submitting his resignation as official physician of the quintuplets, says he cannot understand French. That the good doctor has not picked up a few French phrases, or that the quintuplets have absorbed a smattering of English, will cause surprise. The barrier of language is not usually so insuperable.

If Doctor Dafee's resignation is accepted by the Ontario legislature, one of the most engaging personalities connected with the case will be removed. At least part of the human interest in the Dionne story is the services of a country doctor. There may be better medical talent to supervise the quintuplets, but some of the color will be lost when Doctor Dafee leaves.

Continental United States Feels Impact of Enemy Gunfire men patrolled the streets, questioning all pedestrians.

The "all clear" was sounded at 12:15 a. m.

Meanwhile, all radio stations in southern California were off the air from 7:58 p. m. to 12:10 a. m.

State highway patrolmen immediately closed roads and highways leading to the scene of the attack.

A shell crater was found in the canyon behind Goleta, and several explosions were seen along the beach and in the hills behind.

On July 2, 1918, a German submarine disguised as a freighter attacked a tug and some barges off Orleans, Mass., and fired a few ineffectual shots at the shore, where scores of bathers witnessed the attack.

Last night's twilight assault also was witnessed by a number of persons, some of whom raced to the beach to get a close view of the giant submarine.

One of these, G. O. Brown, an oil field worker, said the submarine was so big that while it was on the surface it looked like a "destroyer or cruiser."

The attack duplicated in major respects that of a German submarine on the island of Aruba in the Dutch West Indies a week ago when a huge oil refinery was shelled, but without much damage.

Several witnesses told stories which indicated that light signals flashed by fifth columnists from the mountainside at Montecito might have guided the enemy undersea boat.

The Rev. Arthur Basham of the Congregationalist Church at Pomona reported he saw lights flashing from a vessel about two miles out in the channel. At about the same time, lights were flashed from the Montecito heights, according to an air raid warden.

Radio stations went off the air at 7:58 p. m. (PWT), but by this time President Roosevelt had concluded his speech and the submarine, at 7:35, had ceased firing.

(Editor's Note—The shelling of the huge refinery belonging to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey at Aruba by a German submarine was the first time in this war that enemy shells had been fired at objectives on Western Hemisphere territory. Aruba was attacked again Thursday morning, a number of projectiles landing near the refinery. The same day two vessels in the Gulf of Paria, off Port of Spain, Trinidad, were attacked by an enemy submarine.)

Last night's shelling shocked West Coast residents who, because of the long lull in enemy submarine attacks off the Pacific Coast, had felt that the menace was being diminished by the constant patrol maintained by the Army and Navy.

After the shelling, some witnesses said they thought the submarine turned southwards, where lie the important naval facilities and docks at Los Angeles and San Diego. One witness said he saw lights flashing off Santa Barbara a short time after the attack halted.

MATA HART'S Daughter

By MAURICE DEKOBRA and LEYLA GEORGIE

SYNOPSIS

A Fifth Column blitzkrieg is under way in England led by an elusive Ajax who is more menacing than Stuka bombers to the defense of the realm. The confessed treason of Mara, an English spy, followed by the murder of Capt. Hugh Kenley, have put Sir John Sanderson, British Intelligence chief, in a desperate quandary. Sir John's ward, Brinda Duncan, had given a list in her car to a lumping stranger whom she mistook for an Englishman. But he was a Nazi parachutist and, when leaving Brinda's car, he shot Capt. Kenley.

Brinda met Lieut. Richard Madden, a former beau, in the Intelligence Office's "rogues gallery."

He told her that his engagement to Gladys, daughter of Lord and Lady Mountwain, is to be announced that evening. Gladys had unpleasant memories of Gladys as a schoolmate. But Sir John and his ward went to the Mountwain party, where Gladys proudly showed off the rapier-like Russian. During a Vaslav-directed "blackout dance," a low cry is heard. Lord Mountwain tells Dick, "Colonel Sanderson has been stabbed," then asked him that none can escape from the grounds. While Brinda summarizes what she saw, the wounded girl lies near her to be cared for in the house.

CHAPTER TEN

Brinda, startled, and found Lord Mountwain at her elbow. "What's happened?" he asked. "A man has been stabbed," she said. "A man?" "Yes," Brinda smiled. "A Russian, I think."

"Quite," Mountwain thoughtfully said. "He was a Russian."

"A Russian?" Brinda asked. "Yes," Mountwain said. "A Russian, I think."

"Quite," Mountwain thoughtfully said. "He was a Russian."

"A Russian?" Brinda asked. "Yes," Mountwain said. "A Russian, I think."

"Quite," Mountwain thoughtfully said. "He was a Russian."

"No," said Dick from the doorway, "I'm going to see whether Vaslav has had any more novel and original ideas." With a bow to Brinda, he departed.

"Queer chap," observed Lord Mountwain. "What do you suppose he meant by that? Do you suppose he's really jealous?"

"Perhaps," said Brinda. "Very sad for him, if he is," remarked Mountwain. "Gladys will make hash of a jealous husband. She'll like him better if he's indifferent."

Today's Quiet Moment

(By the Rev. James R. Galley)

Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church

O Thou Who art eternal in the heavens, we come to Thee in deep awareness of our own mortality, our own weakness, our own inability to cope with the problems and difficulties of earthly existence. Bestow upon us the fullness of Thy Spirit, O God, that our need might be met through Christ. May we receive from Thee that strength which we need, that courage which is essential, and that life which can be obtained in no other way. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Rev. Charles F. Freeman, pastor of Salem Reformed Church, one of the speakers, said: "If what the committee says isn't true it is too bad that such a report will get out about the school."

Mrs. Frank X. Shelley, president of the P. T. In the first place, a temporary building would be nothing but temporary, and for the school board to construct such a building at $10,000, $12,000 or $15,000 would cut in on the board's borrowing power when it wanted to do something real."
